DESIGN DECISIONS

- The JD upload banner says the file was read, not imported. Parsed values land in ordinary editable fields below so Rajesh is asked to check them rather than told it worked.
- Rate-card variance fires while he types, not at submission. He learns his ₹2,100 ceiling breaks the agreed band before it reaches HR, which stops the approval loop bouncing.
- Sectioned into six steps because a contract requisition carries commercial and compliance fields a job posting does not. Engagement terms, not the JD, are what make this a contract requisition.
- Total engagement value is computed, never typed. It drives approval routing thresholds.
- He names the hiring manager here. That single field is what routes every incoming profile to Arun instead of back to Rajesh.

Resolve

Panel gap — only 2 compliant vendors are scoped to Technology in Gurugram. Rajesh's next requisition there will have thin coverage.

DESIGN DECISIONS

- The panel is the screen; the pending approval sits on top as an interruption. Kavita manages vendors, she does not manage requisitions.
- Category scope and location on each row are the fields that decide who receives Rajesh's DevOps requirement. They are visible at rest, not buried in a detail page.
- Zenith is flagged on two axes at once: an expiring document and 41 submissions at a 6% shortlist rate. A spray-and-pray vendor should be obvious without running a report.
- The suspended Apex row offers Resolve, not delete. It has one candidate at offer stage, so removal has to walk her through each in-flight person.
- Panel gap analysis runs continuously. Thin coverage surfaces before a requisition sits unfilled, not after.

⚠️ Notice period is 45 days against a 30-day ceiling. PepsiCo rejects roughly 7 in 10 submissions on this reason. Add a note on early release if you have one.

✅ No duplicate found. Rate is within your agreed card ceiling of ₹1,950.

DESIGN DECISIONS

- The left rail is cross-client. PepsiCo sits alongside Unilever and Britannia because that is Meera's actual day. This only works because vendors are independent tenants, not sub-records of a client.
- She sees ₹1,700-1,950, never Rajesh's ₹2,100 ceiling. She sees her own slot count but nothing about who else received the requirement.
- The notice-period warning is the highest-value element here. It quotes the historical rejection rate on that exact reason, so she is checked before she spends effort and the client stops receiving unviable profiles.
- Duplicate and rate-card checks run before submit, not after. A recruiter should never format a profile for a candidate already in process.
- Consent capture is recorded at submission for DPDP compliance, with a timestamp.

When you pass on someone, pick a reason. It goes back to the vendor and shapes what they send next.

DESIGN DECISIONS

- Scoped to one requirement and opening on profiles, because Arun never touches requisition creation. He receives candidates, not requisitions.
- The badge row does the screening before he reads anything: Nikhil is in band with a notice problem, Priya is clean but missing Terraform, Ramesh is above band and over the experience ceiling.
- Rate appears as a verdict — above band — not as ₹2,300 against ₹2,100. The internal ceiling stays with Rajesh and Kavita.
- Shortlist and pass are inline. If reviewing nine candidates costs nine page loads, he goes back to messaging the vendor directly.
- Meera's vendor note arrives as context on the card. It is her answer to the warning she saw on her own screen, delivered in place rather than by email.
- Rejection reasons are framed by their consequence for the vendor, because that is what makes the next batch better.
